

Clelia Viecelli is the Chair of the program in Food, Sustainability, & the Environment at The Umbra Institute in Perugia, Italy, where she teaches courses on the anthropology of food, environmental anthropology, and the history and culture of food in Italy. Since January 2024, she has been a research fellow on a two-year research project on the sociology of taste coordinated by the Universities of Siena and Trento, Italy. She also teaches food anthropology at Scuola Politecnica di Design (SPD), a postgraduate school of design in Milan, Italy. As part of her PhD at the University of Southampton, UK, she conducted ethnographic fieldwork among female natural winegrowers in Italy. She has published on Italian natural wines and biodynamics from an anthropological perspective. Her research interests include wine, food, gender, and human–nonhuman relationships.
